

From: nick [REDACTED]

To: cellercise <cellercise@aol.com>

Subject: review of cellerciser vs Bellicon

Date: Thu, Feb 14, 2008 12:13 pm

hi david

here is a review you asked for after our phone conversation

i have had so much trouble with Enlightenment Co , they won't acknowledge that the Bellicon is at fault , i think because of responsibility worries , after much , much effort they have agreed to refund me most of the money as long as i waive all rights to sue etc($700) but it cost me $1000+ after taxes and double shipping etc.

how can i be the only one that has had a problem with this rebounder ?

I am also an experienced rebounder so my body is accustomed to this exercise

I give my permission for you to publish any part of below review ;

i have been rebounding for many years and wanted a new one , after much investigation I discovered the 2 most expensive , The Cellerciser and the Bellicon rebounder , the Bellicon was much more expensive so i bought it , thinking it should be the best .

no way , its worse than anything else I have tried , it immediately hurt my feet , specifically my arches , because it made my feet pronate inwards , i tried many variations of bouncing , barefoot , anti pronating runners , etc no luck , still hurt me . the bungees also frayed after one week (it costs $75 to replace the bungees) , the sellers said i needed the extra strong bungees , still no difference

so next i bought the Cellerciser , this one was perfect it had a nice soft bounce but not too deep , and the pad moved downwards with my feet , rather than tilting into the center . i can easily jog or bounce high or low , because the pad seems to adjust to the exercise , its the best . many thanks

Nick [REDACTED]

=